THE CHICAGO STAR

Vol. 2, No. 28 | Published Weekly | Chicago, July 12, 1947 | 66 | 5¢

Flying stars

It all depended upon which newspaper you read.

They were flying saucers or meteorites or sun spots or atomic experiments or Russian planes or optical illusions.

But you know what they really are—don't be fooled.

They're the 9,000 new Star subscriptions secured in the sub drive sailing into the heavens! Each one of these new Stars is a "North Star"—a strong, steady beacon—a guide for the people.

'Sneak' wage cuts mount

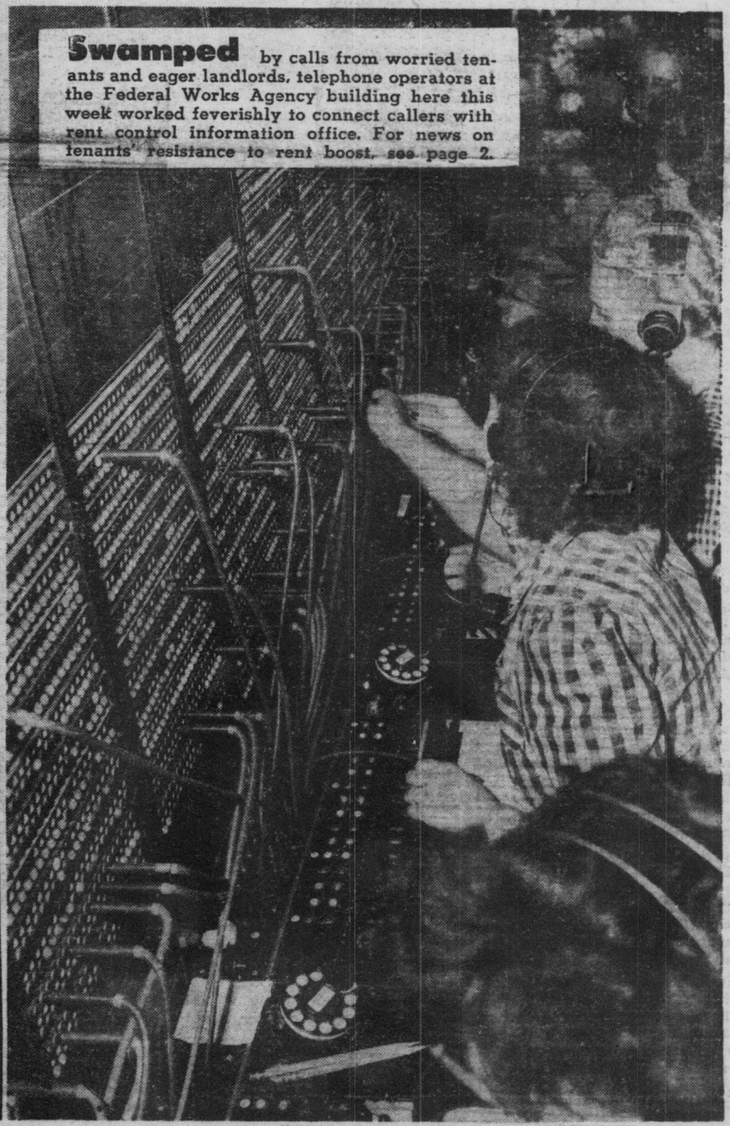
Broken homes mean broken hearts to the unhappy Chicagoans who go to Domestic Relations Court each week, as this young mother did, to pour out their stories. This woman, who came to court with three children to ask that the children's father be ordered to pay for their support, symbolizes heartbreak caused by the housing shortage. For the full story of how the housing shortage is destroying the American home, see page 3.



Swamped by calls from worried tenants and eager landlords, telephone operators at the Federal Works Agency building here this week worked feverishly to connect callers with rent control information office. For news on tenants' resistance to rent boost, see page 2.
